5:00 MISCELLANY5:15 JAZZ ARCHIVES: Philip F. Elwood. (Oct. 11)5:45 BRITISH WEEKLIES*ON CAMPUS POLITICS:

The recent entry of youth all over the world into the non-specific, but still clearly definable, arena of political action has become such a target for writers and speakers that already the clichés and stereotypes have a time-worn air.

KPFA feels that the listeners would appreciate hearing from the students themselves—what they think is more important than what we think. The series "On Campus Politics" will include various speakers of varying views, the common denominator being that they are "active" on the campus.

It is our hope to have other California campuses beside the University of California represented as time goes on. We urge you to listen to this new biweekly series, Mondays at 5:45, beginning October 17.

In this connection Kenneth Rexroth has recorded for us "The Sudden Revolt" which appeared recently in Nation Magazine. It will be heard on Saturday October 15 at 10 P.M.

When political campaigns avoid the basic issues, is democracy working?

The editors of The liberal democrat think not. Read what politically active liberals have to say about disarmament, civil rights, China, resurgent McCarthyism, etc. Learn what they are doing about it.

MAHAGONNY (October 16)

Nothing is so characteristic of the intellectual state of Europe between two world wars as the dichotomy between anarchy and order. It cuts right through the representative works of art of the period, through expressionist painting, surrealist literature, through music stripped of the fetters of rhythm and tonality. Highest subjectivity arose side-by-side with collectivism; playfulness with technique and form, with political, functional art. The same dichotomy disquieted the public, the "consumer" of art raised in tradition.

On March 9, 1930, took place the premiere of the Weill-Brecht opera "Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny." After the premier there arose a stormy battle between friends and foes of the work. Among the demonstrators one could observe a middle-aged man who simultaneously applauded and booed. It was he who honestly vented the mode of the public. The work was felt to be ambivalent; it repulsed and attracted at the same time; it laid bare a psychic condition which modern medicine terms schizoid.

The City of Mahagonny, in which Brecht's tragic play takes place, is a symbolic caricature of freedom: a legendary place, where everyone can live as he pleases. This city has American characteristics, or, to be more precise, it is constituted just like the fantasy of a European as he pictured America to be at the time of the Gold Rush. It is founded and populated by adventurers, wrecked human beings, criminals, procurers and prostitutes. Several songs which are sung in the opera utilize an English of primitive formation, a type which European immigrants might have spoken in the pioneering years. Mahagonny symbolizes the concept of liberty in a way which is considered "capitalistic" by the Socialists. The frontiers of freedom are set by the rules of supply and demand. The city is founded in a desolate region, where Fatty the Bookkeeper, Trinity-Moses and Leokadia Begbick get mired while fleeing from the police in a truck. La Begbick invents the name "Mahagonny" (city of nets) and formulates her ideal: no suffering and license to do anything. . . .

—H. H. Stuckenschmidt

OEDIPUS AT COLONUS (October 16): this is a BBC World Theater production in a new translation by C. A. Trypanis with music specially composed by John Hotchkis, produced by Val Gielgud, head of BBC Sound Drama. The collaboration of Val Gielgud with his famous brother John in play production is, oddly, comparatively rare. The last time the two brothers worked together on a play was when Val produced Hamlet for radio in the 1930's, with John in the title role. And they have not acted together since 1925, when Val was his brother's understudy in The Cherry Orchard at the Lyric Theater, Hammersmith, London. Sophocles wrote Oedipus at Colonus when he was about ninety years old, and it was first produced in 401 B.C. Powerfully and movingly the play deals with the tragic last days of Oedipus, blind, and deserted save by his daughter Antigone. He had torn out his eyes after his horrific discovery that he had unwittingly killed his father and married his mother. He finds himself now at Colonus, but there is no peace for him. The local people are antagonistic; he quarrels with his uncle Creon who wants to take him back to Thebes; all he seeks is an end to his suffering, and not by his own hand. To bring death is the duty and the privilege of the gods of ancient Greece, and his comes to him with a relentless certitude. For a great actor like Sir John Gielgud the role of Oedipus—which he has never played before—offers magnificent opportunity for his superb gift of using language to stir and thrill the heart, as in the words with which Oedipus addresses Theseus:

. . . I will lead the way to the place where I must die!
 But you must never show that spot to any man,
 Never reveal where it is hidden! Then it shall be
 A source of strength greater than all the shields,
 Than all the spears of allies! But that
 You must see for yourself, when we come to the place,
 You and I—no words must touch that mystery!
 . . . Now it is time to go! The gods
 Are driving me on, they hesitate no more . . .
